THE CONDUCTOR

One cannot mention the modern symphonic band without linking the name of William D. Revelli to its history, development and advancement. For more than 35 years, Dr. Revelli has played a foremost role in the band movement in America, first as a conductor of the Hobart, Indiana National Championship High School Band, and later as Conductor of Bands at The University of Michigan. Perhaps no other figure in the band world has traveled further in the interests of developing bands and their music than has Dr. Revelli who annually serves as clinician, adjudicator and advisor to bands everywhere in America and abroad.
